Columbia Institute of Pharmacy, Raipur Celebrated National Pharmacy Week on 20th November – 22nd November.

Columbia Institute of Pharmacy marked the 64th National Pharmacy Week (NPW) with a series of vibrant and awareness-driven activities from 20th to 22nd November. This year's NPW theme, "Pharmacists as Advocates of Vaccination," highlighted the crucial role of pharmacists in promoting immunization and public health. The celebrations commenced with a formal inaugural ceremony on 20th November. Faculty members, students, and guests gathered to highlight the importance of the NPW theme. Speakers emphasized the essential contribution of pharmacists in community vaccination drives, patient counseling, and strengthening healthcare systems. The inauguration set a purposeful tone for the three-day event, encouraging students to take active roles in health awareness initiatives. The second day was dedicated to a series of engaging competitions aimed at showcasing creativity, knowledge, and environmental responsibility. Students enthusiastically participated in Rangoli Competition, Colorful and theme-based rangolis added vibrance to the campus atmosphere. Mehandi Competition Participants displayed beautiful and intricate mehandi designs. Quiz Competition, A high-energy quiz tested students' understanding of pharmaceutical sciences, vaccination, and current healthcare topics. Best Out of Waste Students transformed waste materials into useful and artistic items, promoting environmental sustainability. The concluding day featured a health awareness rally, where students and faculty marched with banners and slogans promoting the importance of vaccination and the pharmacist's role in public health. The rally aimed to encourage community awareness and support for routine immunization. Additionally, students took part in medicinal garden decoration, beautifying the herbal garden within the campus. They arranged plant species, added educational labels, and highlighted the medicinal significance of various herbs—promoting the importance of natural resources and traditional medicine. The 64th National Pharmacy Week at Columbia Institute of Pharmacy successfully combined awareness, creativity, professionalism, and community engagement. The series of events strengthened student participation and highlighted the pivotal contribution of pharmacists as vaccination advocates in modern healthcare.
